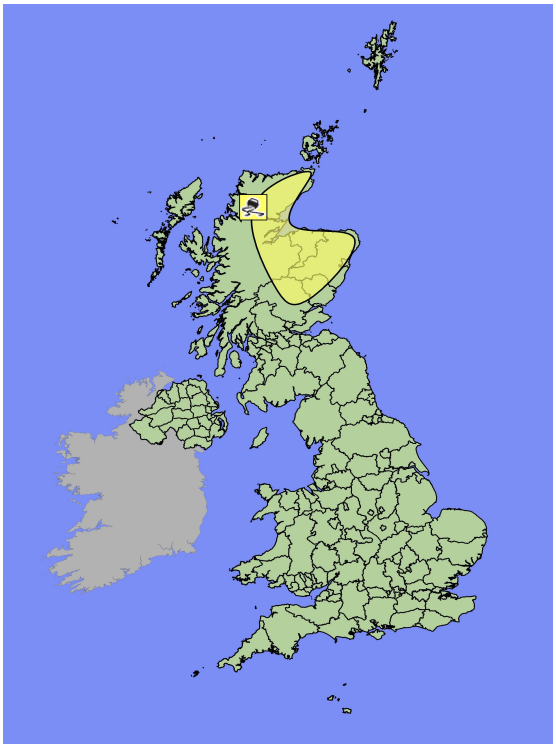
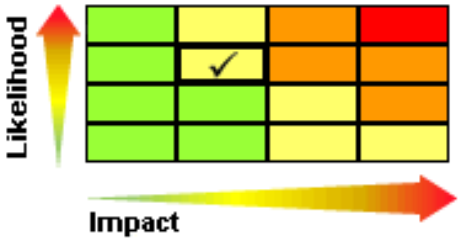
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The frontal system that has brought Wednesday's rain and snow will clear eastwards into the North Sea overnight allowing skies to clear across the northeast of Scotland. Given that surfaces are already cold, it will only take a short period of clearer skies to allow them to dip below freezing.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Thu, 14th Feb 2013 until 10:00 on Thu, 14th Feb 2013

Clearing skies overnight will allow road surface temperatures to fall below freezing leading to icy stretches on untreated surfaces.

The public should be aware of possible travel disruption.
